

Myths and Facts

Myth: People living with a mental illness can never recover

Fact: Recovery from mental illness is possible - it is not the absence of illness but a person's ability to take control of their illness, to live life to their full potential. The four major dimensions that are essential to life in recovery are:

Health - manage one's disease as well as live in a physically and emotionally healthy way

Home - have a stable and safe place to live

Purpose - engage in meaningful daily activities such as a job, school, hobbies, or volunteering

Community - maintain relationships and networks that provide support, friendship, love and hope

Myth: People living with a mental illness just take from society, they make no contribution

Fact: People with a mental illness do achieve, contribute and enhance their communities - some examples of those having made a difference ...

Jim Carrey, Patty Duke - entertainment

Clara Hughes, Ron Ellis - sports

John Nash (Nobel Prize) - science

Senator R. Dallaire - Canadian military, senate

Margaret Trudeau, Winston Churchill - political

The World Health Organization (WHO) reports that "misunderstanding and stigma surrounding mental illness are widespread. Despite effective treatments for mental disorders, there is a belief that they are untreatable or that people with mental disorders are difficult, not intelligent, or incapable of making decisions. This stigma can lead to abuse, rejection and isolation and exclude people from health care or support."

Myths and Facts

Historically, mental illness has not been a topic of conversation and if discussed, was carried out in hushed whispers of fear and shame. Our ideas and beliefs about mental illness have frequently been the result of portrayals in popular media or news headlines. The portrayals, however, often represent the stereotypes or myths associated with mental illness and are not based on facts.

Enhancing knowledge about mental illness and challenging the myths is vital as misinformation can have many negative results:

- Individuals in need of help are reluctant to seek help
- Access to services is denied or compromised
- Family and personal relationships are strained
- Limited expectations, opportunities for those living with a mental illness
- Individuals with an illness deal with stigma, discrimination

Myth: People with mental illness are violent.

Fact: The majority of people living with mental illness are not violent. When violence occurs, it typically is for the same reasons as in the general public.....feeling threatened or the excessive use of drugs and/or alcohol.

Myths and Facts

Myth: Mental illnesses are not real they are....

- An excuse for poor behaviour
- The outcome of poor parenting
- Punishment for evil behaviour (possession by spirits, or a curse)

Fact: Mental illnesses are medical conditions with genetic and biological causes - social and environmental factors may trigger the onset of mental illness in vulnerable individuals.

Myth: People with a mental illness just need to snap out of it, or 'pull it together.'

Fact: Mental illnesses are medical illnesses. They are not a sign of personal weakness or just laziness. Mental illnesses are not the outcome of choices made by an individual.

Myth: People living with a mental illness are less intelligent.

Fact: Mental illnesses are not developmental or intellectual disabilities. Individuals with varying intellectual abilities have been diagnosed with a mental illness. John Forbes Nash, a Nobel Prize winner, lives with schizophrenia.

Individuals living with a developmental disorder can also be living, at the same time, with a mental illness - this is considered a dual diagnosis.
